

Lambros Athanasiou

Visiting Professor

Short CV

Lambros Athanasiou was born in Ioannina, in 1985. He holds an Engineering Degree (BSc and MS) in Computer Engineering from the University of Aegean in Greece, and a PhD in Biomedical Engineering from the University of Ioannina in Greece. He held a Postdoctoral position for over 3 years at Harvard Medical School, Boston MA, and Massachusetts Institute of Technology Cambridge MA, in the US. He has over 5 years of experience in the Medical Industry as a Sr. Scientist in Canon Medical Research USA. He has been appointed as a visiting professor at the University of Ioannina in Greece, where he is currently teaching in the Department of Materials Science and Engineering and conducting his research. He is the author and co-author of over 60 publications in Journals and conference proceedings, 5 book chapters, one book, and more than 10 USA, EU, and worldwide patents. He participated in EU, NIH, RO1, and industry-funded projects and most of his research is translated into commercial projects in industry. His research interests include Medical Image Processing, Machine Learning, Blood Flow, Cardiovascular Systems, and Computerized Systems in Medicine.